Introduction

The CAP 2028–2034 Proposal: Priorities, Reforms, and Expected Impacts

The reform of the Common Agricultural Policy (CAP) for 2028–2034 comes at a moment of significant transition for European agriculture. Farmers face rising input costs, climate-related shocks, geopolitical uncertainty, and growing expectations around sustainability. In this context, the CAP reform is more than an adjustment of financial instruments: it is a rethinking of how Europe intends to support farm incomes while strengthening competitiveness and long-term resilience.

The European Commission's factsheets introduce a substantial redesign of income support, centred on the new Degressive Area-Based Income Support (DABIS). By integrating several existing payments into a single, more coherent structure, DABIS reduces fragmentation and links income support more closely to policy objectives. Its underlying principles are clear: support should reach active farmers, be fairer and more comparable across the EU, and reflect the diversity of European farming systems. The reform prioritises structurally vulnerable groups—including young and new farmers, women, small farms, and those operating in areas with natural constraints—while mandatory degressivity and capping redirect resources away from land concentration and toward resilience-building. Member States' Partnership Plans will ultimately determine how these principles translate into practice.

It is within this evolving policy landscape that the Vision for Agriculture and Food (EC, 2025) should be understood. The Vision provides strategic direction for shaping a fairer and more competitive CAP, built around four priorities—Attractiveness, Competitiveness, Future-proofing, and Connection—which together aim to support a more dynamic, resilient, and globally connected agri-food system. It emphasises diversified trade relations, crisis preparedness, regulatory simplification, and technological innovation as essential for future resilience. Yet its operationalisation will require careful choices in areas such as climate, trade, and the bioeconomy, where economic, social, and environmental interests often intersect.

This intensive online training will engage you for three full days, exploring key elements of the CAP reform and the Vision, and helping you understand the new strategic, targeted, and forward-looking policies that will shape European agriculture.
